

Caitlin Pearman
illustration portfolio

@caitlinpearman

caitlinpearman@gmail.com

caitlinpearman.wixsite.com/caitlinpearman

(Left) Slipper the Cat
Two layer lino print, experimenting with open editions and making gradients.

(Right) Nightingale
Reduction lino print exploring mark-making and detail.

the Pebble collector

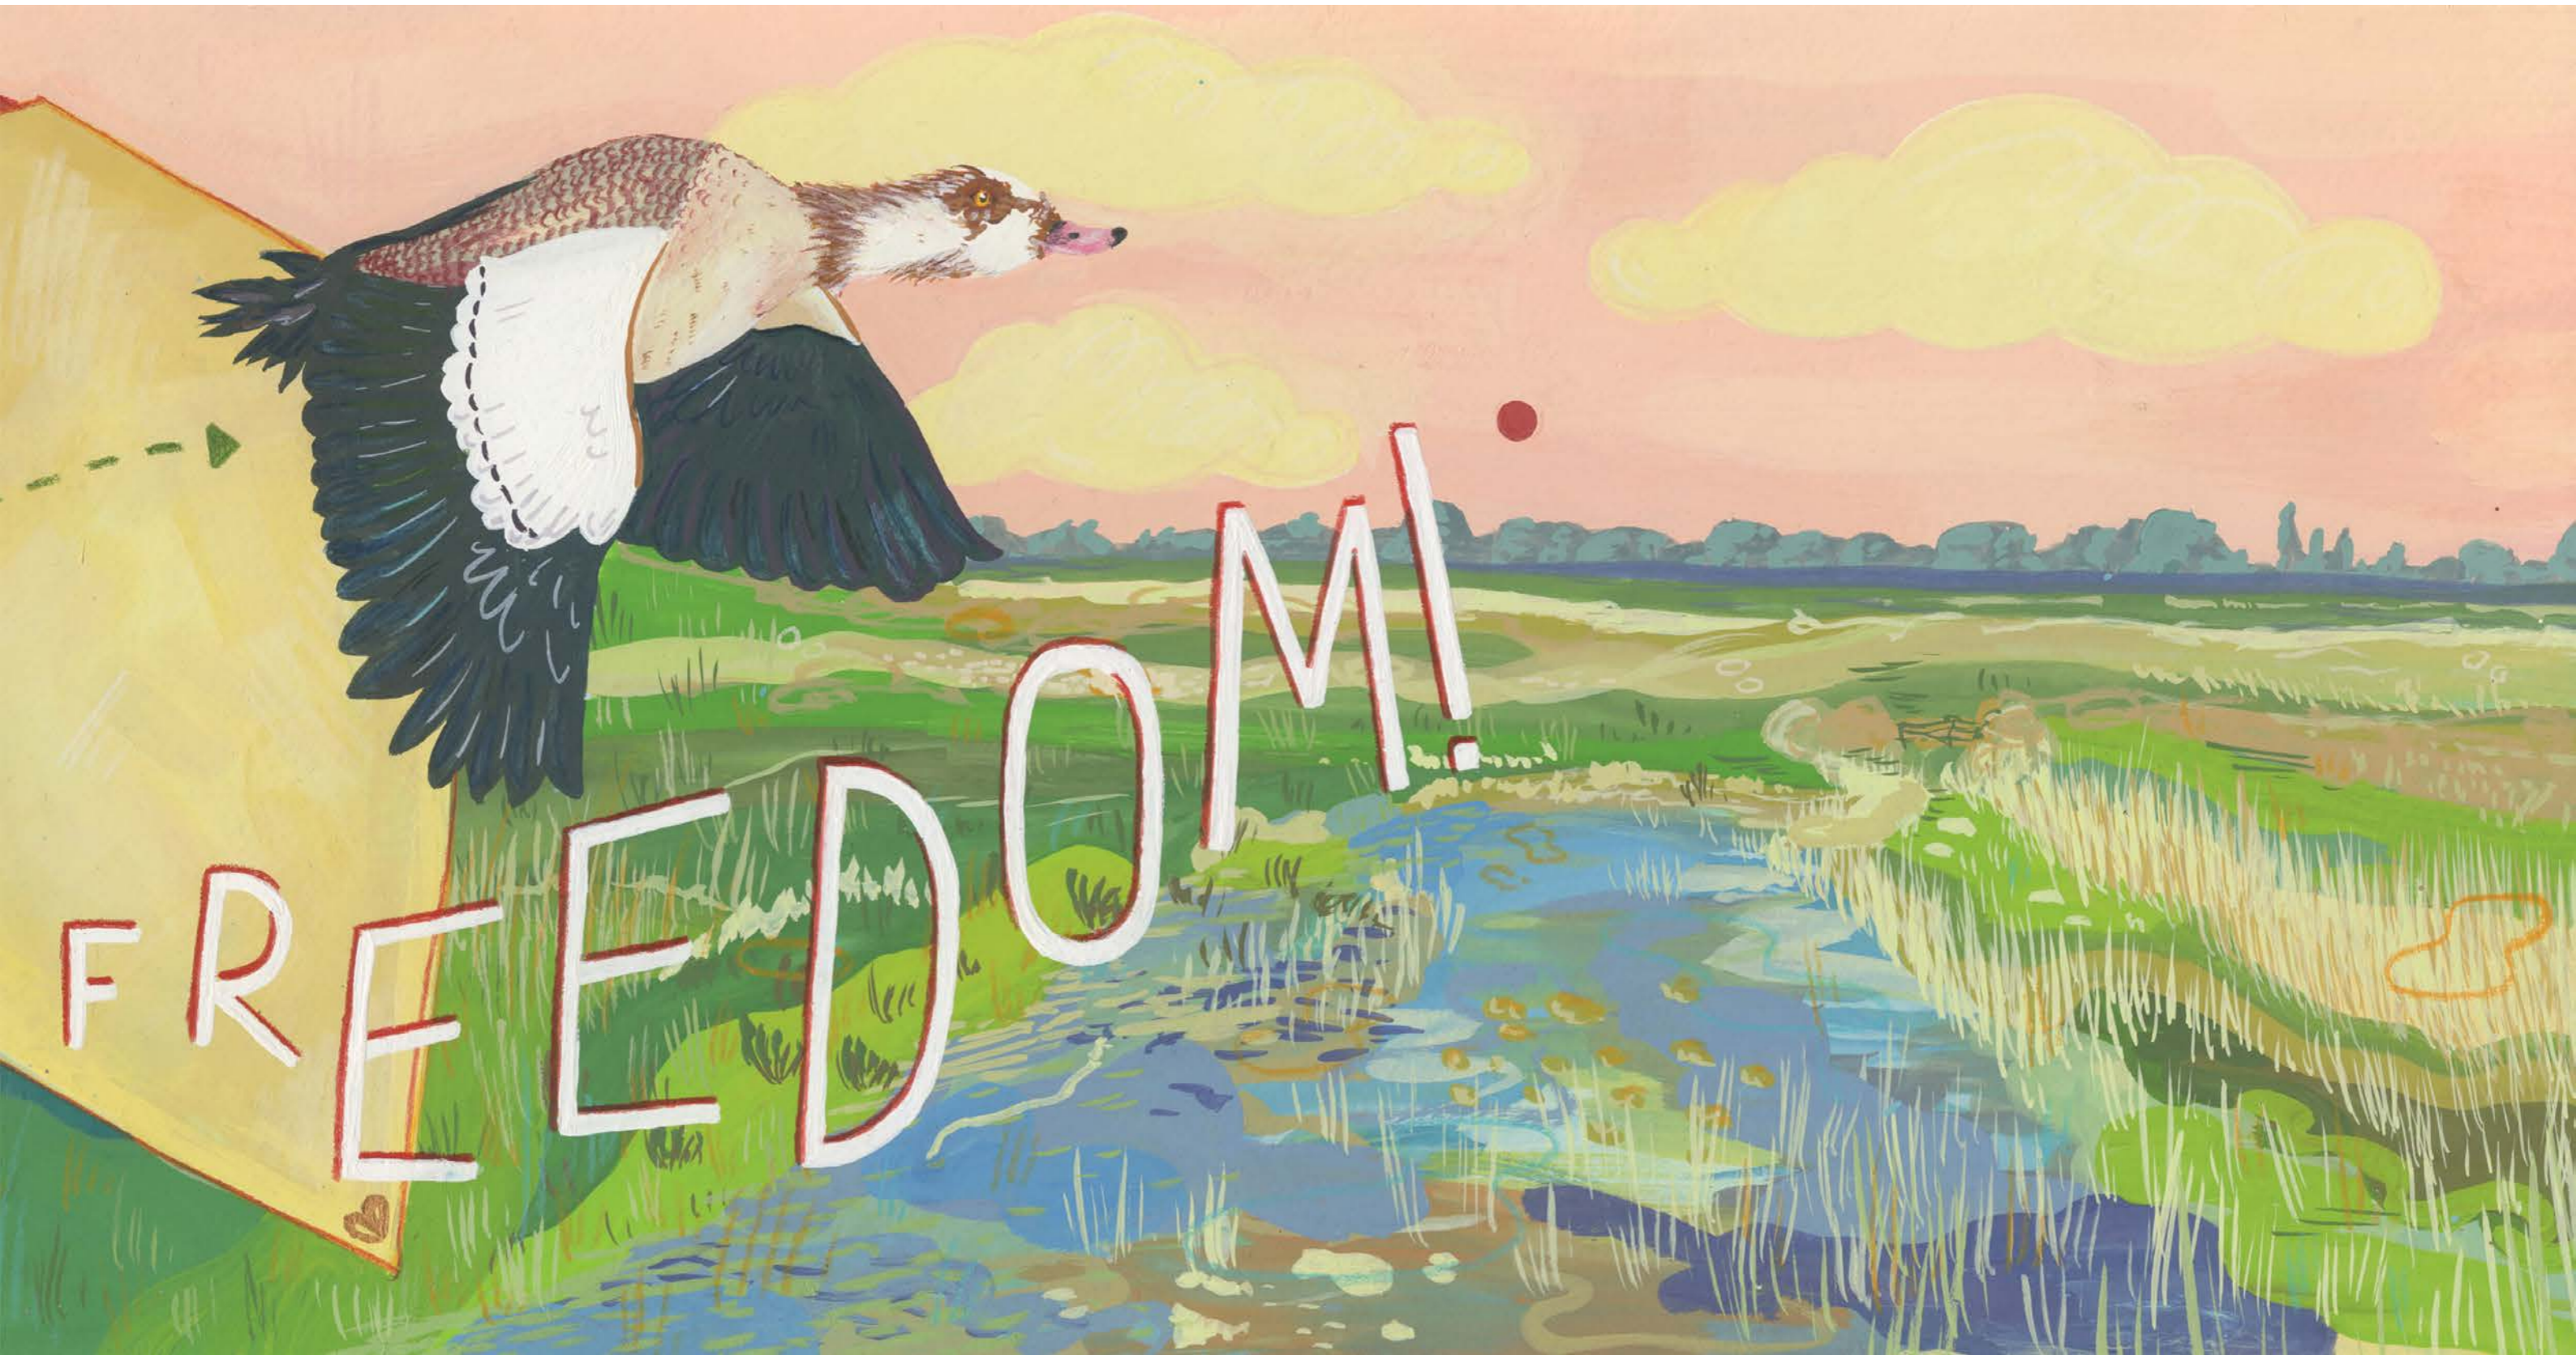

Caching is a behaviour exhibited by many birds, particularly corvids. It involves collecting and hiding objects that are of interest to them.

(Left) The Pebble Collector
Two layer risograph print, aiming to educate about caching: a fascinating corvid behaviour.

(Right) What's The Big Idea?!
Three layer risograph printed exhibition poster.

Introducing the Egyptian Goose

Gouache and coloured pencil, booklet aiming to educate about introduced species and the Egyptian goose. Made as part of the collaboration with the Norfolk Broads Authority.

(Left) Jacks in the Park
Gouache and coloured pencil, sketchbook spread painted from life.

(Right) Lucid as You and I
A linocut print stemming from the above painting, aiming to capture the magic of the bird species we are lucky to share the Earth with.

OMEN OF THE OPTIMIST

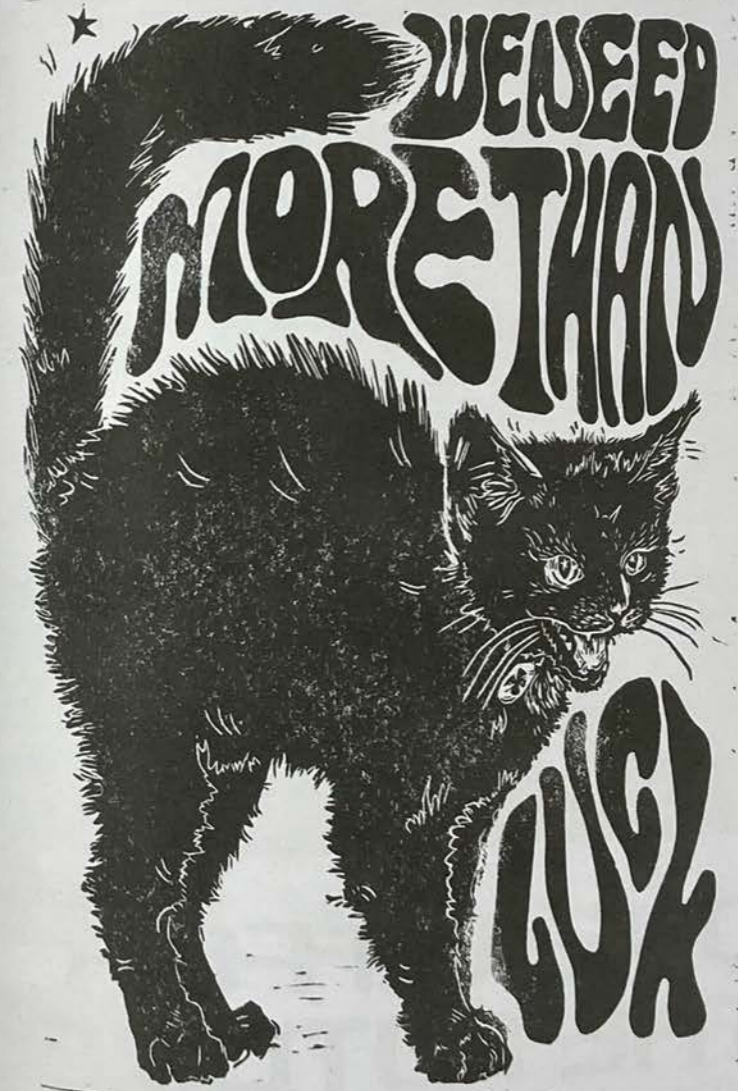

Caitlin Pearman

She/her

Year 2 BA (Hons) Illustration

@caitlinpearman

Black cats are unlucky for some, but in the dystopian future they are viewed by the optimist as an omen of good things to come. These posters are plastered across the walls of the decaying city; a constant reminder to those rushing past that, even in the bleakest of times, there is always good fortune on the horizon...

OMEN OF THE OPTIMIST

Caitlin Pearman

She/her

Year 2 BA (Hons) Illustration

@caitlinpearman

Black cats are unlucky for some, but in the dystopian future they are viewed by the optimist as an omen of good things to come. These posters are plastered across the walls of the decaying city; a constant reminder to those rushing past that, even in the bleakest of times, there is always good fortune on the horizon...

Omen of the Optimist

Single layer linocuts, made in collaboration with the Copenhagen Institute for Future Studies, exploring how communities may band together in a future scenario.

These prints were also published in Storehouse Magazine, issue 26: Past, Present, Future.

(Left) The Coppersmith Barbet
 Sketchbook spreads exploring the visualisation of sound and the coppersmith barbet, a bird named after its loud, clanging call.

(Right) Kolkata: A City of Sounds
 Three layer screen print, portraying the contrast between nature and the bustling city.

Eurasian Jays

Collage jays made as part of a picture book project, aiming to educate about the corvid family of birds.

Lily Learns about Corvids

A spread from an illustrated children's book educating about corvids, the family of birds to which crows belong.

Lily Learns about Corvids

Cover mockup for illustrated children's book educating about corvids, the family of birds to which crows belong.