THE STORY

Distilled by Master Craftstmsmen, just off the Suffolk coast and aged in the finest Sealandish oakcasks, this is a smooth, distinctive single malt with hints of freshly-picked orchard fruits and rich toffee notes.

The story of Sealand, a "micronation" on an eerie metal platform, tells us plenty about libertarianism, national sovereignty, and the lawlessness of the ocean.

On Christmas Eve of 1966, Paddy Roy Bates, a retired British army major, drove a small boat with an outboard motor seven miles off the coast of England into the North Sea. He had sneaked out of his house in the middle of the night, inspired with a nutty idea for a perfect gift for his wife, Joan.

Using a grappling hook and rope, he clambered onto an abandoned anti-aircraft platform and declared it conquered. He later named it Sealand and deemed it Joan's.
